

Richard Grunert

Full-Stack Web Developer // Android Developer // Linux Administrator

Objective

To utilize my vast range of skills to write amazing and beautiful code, and to further improve my overall skillset by learning from other developers.

About Me

Computers are my passion; I've been working with them daily since I was a small child and am always improving my skills. I learn things I'm interested in very quickly, and nothing interests me more than computer systems and software development. I've worked with a wide range of systems and languages, and can adapt very quickly to new ones I might need to learn on the fly.

I've built $20,000 websites for attorneys, developed my own software and am a huge Linux aficionado (though I also work daily with Windows and OSX systems). I run my own servers for fun, build websites from scratch and co-administrate a website that gets around 30,000 hits daily from all over the US. I prefer to write software using functional programming conventions, but I'm also well-versed in the Object-Oriented style.

In 2015 I led a team that developed and published Lunar Invasion, a game for Android smartphones that's currently available on the Google Play Store. I'm also a published writer.

You can see examples of my projects at my personal website: <http://furu.guru>.
